Andrew Garrido began learning the piano at the late age of eleven; lacking funds to afford lessons or an instrument, he drew a keyboard onto paper and learnt from YouTube for six months before his first piano lesson. His story has been celebrated in the Guardian and across the BBC, and he has since become a pianist known for his sensitivity, imagination, and control of tone.

He began study with Danielle Salamon upon his entrance to the Purcell School in 2015, where he was awarded the Senior Piano Prize and Senior Academic Music Prize in 2017. He obtained a Licentiate of Trinity College London (LTCL) the same year.

Andrew enrolled at the Guildhall School of Music and Drama in September 2017, having been awarded a scholarship. He studied with acclaimed pianist Charles Owen, obtaining a Master of Music with Distinction in 2022.

He now performs across London and the UK, in both a solo and ensemble capacity. Andrew is proud to offer piano lessons and a range of other musical tuition. He also enjoys his work as a composer and choir director, and he continues to seek out new ways to be involved in music, such as cross-arts and multimedia projects.
